

JULY 2005 – INDIANA NATIONAL AND STATE REGISTER LISTINGS

Jerman School

316 West Walnut Street

Greensburg, IN

School constructed in 1914 in the Tudor Revival style. Significant for architecture and education, the Jerman School has been converted into senior housing utilizing rehabilitation tax credits.

Grace Keiser Maring Library

1808 South Madison Street

Muncie, IN

The Grace Keiser Maring Library was the first branch library in Muncie that served a significant portion of the population. The 1930 Colonial Revival building is one of few surviving public buildings in Muncie designed by local architects (Houck and Smenner).

Fort Wayne Street Bridge

Indiana Avenue over Elkhart River

Goshen, IN

This 180-foot steel truss bridge is rare and significant. The 1896 bridge is one of only seven Pennsylvania through-truss metal bridges left in the state. The Fort Wayne Street Bridge connected the two largest cities in the county, Elkhart and Goshen.

George Boxley Cabin

Pioneer Hill at 1st & Main Streets

Sheridan, IN

Built in c.1828, the Boxley Cabin is the oldest remaining building on land later platted as the Town of Sheridan. Boxley operated a school on the property.

Indiana Harbor Public Library

3605 Grand Avenue

East Chicago, IN

The Indiana Harbor Public Library is one of two Carnegie-funded public libraries in the area.

The library was built in 1913 and is a good example of the Arts & Crafts style, seldom used for public buildings but popular for Carnegie-funded libraries in Indiana.

Kingsbury-Doak Farmhouse

4411 East 153rd Avenue

Hebron vicinity, IN

The oldest portion of the Kingsbury-Doak Farmhouse dates from c.1860. There was a substantial Italianate style addition in 1883. It is one of the best examples of that style in rural Eagle Creek Township. Both the exterior and interior boast remarkably intact woodwork.

Speedway Historic District

Roughly bounded by 16th St., Main Street.,

10th Street,

& Winton Avenue

Speedway, IN

Located west of Indianapolis, the original Speedway City was planned in 1912 by the founders of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway for their employees of automotive industry employees. This early automotive suburb consists of commercial, industrial, and residential properties. Most houses date from the 1920s-1940s and are bungalows and period revival styles.

Abijah O'Neill II House

4040 West 300 South

Crawfordsville vicinity, IN

The Abijah O'Neill II House is one of the best remaining examples of a vernacular Federal era I-house in the county. Constructed in 1848, there is a strong possibility of an Underground Railroad/abolition connection that will be researched in the future.

Blankenship-Hodges-Brown House

7455 Old State Road 67 West

Paragon, IN

This house was built c.1875 by Philip Blankenship, a local lumberman, in the Queen Anne style with Stick/Eastlake details. There are many similarities between this house and those illustrated in pattern books by Palliser, Palliser and Company. The interior is remarkably intact and may utilize as many as 17 different kinds of wood.
